MANAGEMENT DISCUSSION SECTION

Operator: Hello, and welcome to the Annual Shareholders Meeting of Walmart, Inc. Please note that the meeting is being recorded. There will be a general Q&A session after the formal meeting adjourns. You can submit a question at any time by clicking on the Submit Question button on your screen. Walmart would like to remind you that some of the comments today may contain forward-looking statements. Additional information about this is included among the meeting materials available on your screen.

It is now my pleasure to turn the meeting over to Greg Penner, Chairman of the Board of Directors at Walmart.

Mr. Penner, I will now turn the meeting over to you.

Gregory B. Penner
Non-Executive Chairman, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you and good morning, everyone. It's my honor as Chair of the Walmart Board of Directors to welcome you to our 52nd annual shareholders meeting. We appreciate you joining us today. This is an important year for us at Walmart. We're celebrating 60 years since Sam Walton opened our first store in Rogers, Arkansas. A lot has changed since then, but we remain focused on delivering on our promise to help people save money and live a better life, a purpose that has proved to be essential for customers and communities around the world as we continue to work through some of the most challenging times in our history.

Our associates have stepped up again and again, working through a global health crisis, high inflation and supply chain disruptions, all while accelerating our efforts to serve customers in new ways. Our strong performance is an indication of the great people in our stores and throughout the company. And that extends to Doug and his leadership team who continued to navigate this complex time. Our people truly make the difference.

All the nominees standing for election to our board of directors have joined our virtual meeting. Also joining online are representatives from Ernst & Young, Walmart's independent accountants. The inspectors of election today are from Broadridge Financial Solutions. Based on their report, a majority of the shareholders entitled to participate in the meeting are represented online. We have a quorum and may proceed with the business portion of the meeting. Therefore, our meeting is officially called to order.

It is now 10:32 AM. The polls are open and will close after the presentation of the last shareholder proposal. Only shareholders who held shares as of the record date for this meeting are entitled to vote shares. If you have already voted your shares, there is no need to vote again unless you wish to change your vote. If you would like to vote your shares or change your vote, you may do so while the polls are open by following the instructions on your screen.

Now I would like to acknowledge the director nominees, including myself, who are up for re-election this year. They are Tim Flynn, Carla Harris, Tom Horton, Marissa Mayer, Doug McMillon, Sarah Friar, Randall Stephenson, Cesar Conde, Steuart Walton, and Rob Walton. Thank you all for your willingness to continue to serve our company.

Stepping off the board and not standing for re-election is Steve Reinemund, who has made very significant contributions to our company. Steve has served on our board for 12 years, including as Chair of our Compensation and Management Development Committee since 2017. I've personally enjoyed working with Steve, and our board has benefited greatly from his strategic acumen and his tough questions, always delivered with style and grace. We're grateful to Steve for everything he has contributed to our company over the years. We're going to miss him greatly. Thank you, Steve.

Next, I've asked Walmart President and CEO, Doug McMillon, to share an update on the company's priorities. Then Rachel to share an update on the company's priorities. Then Rachel Brand, our Corporate Secretary, will take us through the formal business of the meeting. Doug?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Greg. Good morning, everyone, and thanks for your interest in our company. During the last fiscal year, we grew sales by 9%, grew operating profit by 18%, excluding divestitures, and generated $24 billion in operating cash flow. These results enabled us to return $16 billion to shareholders in dividends and share repurchases, and invest $13 billion in capital to grow our business.

We're grateful to our associates for their hard work and service to others. Our purpose is to help people save money and live a better life, and they continue to make that purpose real. They've risen to the challenges of the past two years, finding new ways to serve the needs of our customers, our members, and their fellow associates through all the twists and turns of the global pandemic.

Our sales performance in the first quarter demonstrates that customers and members count on us to help them save money, especially during inflationary times. We missed the bottom line for the quarter, so we continue to make adjustments to improve performance as we move through the year. Our strategy is designed to serve people seamlessly, whether that's shopping in our stores and clubs, picking up their order, or having it delivered.

Globally, our e-commerce business, which includes pickup and delivery, grew to over $73 billion in sales last year. We're saving people money and time. Increasingly, we'll also support their desire to be healthier and improve their family's financial position. There are natural connections between food and health and wellness and retail and financial services, that enable us to serve them more holistically and strengthen our business model at the same time.

So, we're building a customer-centric, mutually reinforcing flywheel that not only connects health and wellness and financial services to retail and vice versa, but it also opens up opportunities for us to serve other businesses, large and small.

As examples, in the US, they can use our fulfillment services, Walmart GoLocal delivery-as-a-service or purchase ads through Walmart Connect. Our business model is becoming stronger and more diversified as we add related businesses and more customers become members of Walmart plus Sam's Club or our other forms of membership around the world.

Just as we continue to seek to strengthen our customer value proposition, we continue to strengthen our associate value proposition. Our goal is to turn even more jobs into careers by strengthening a ladder of opportunity for our associates. As of April of this year, the average hourly wage for associates in our stores, clubs, and supply chain exceeds $17 here in the US, our average starting wage in the US is now $15.70, and the highest starting hourly wage is $32.

In the US, about 75% of Walmart's salaried management in our stores, clubs, and supply chain started out in an hourly role. Beyond pay, we offer a wide range of benefits including a menu of healthcare options and free college tuition for associates through our Live Better U program. Since launching in 2018, over 75,000 associates have enrolled in the program and 11,000 associates have graduated.

When it comes to helping strengthen communities, last year, our company donated $1.5 billion in cash, food, and other products. Those gifts went to organizations working on everything from hunger relief to advancing gender and racial equity. We remain focused on our commitment to diversity equity and inclusion inside the company, and we plan to release an updated report on our efforts to foster inclusion and belonging in the coming weeks.

We're working at scale when it comes to our planet. Our goal is to reach 100% renewable energy by 2035 in order to hit zero emissions across global operations by 2040. In 2017, we launched Project Gigaton with the aim of reducing or avoiding a gigaton of greenhouse gas emissions by 2030. To-date, our suppliers have reported more than 574 million metric tonnes of reduced or avoided emissions. We're also working toward protecting, managing, and/or restoring at least 50 million acres of land and 1 million square miles of ocean by 2030. This is all part of our goal to become a regenerative company. It's about placing people and the planet at the center of our business practices. We believe that the strongest businesses that perform best for shareholders over time will be the ones that effectively serve all stakeholder groups, including customers, associates, suppliers, communities, and the planet.

Again, thank you for your interest in our company. Now, I'll turn it over to Rachel Brand, our Corporate Secretary. She'll take us through the presentation of the proposals.

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Doug. As we've done in previous years, we will begin with the normal business and move on to a Q&A session after the meeting adjourns. The rules of conduct for the meeting are available on the virtual meeting site. Under those rules, each person presenting a shareholder proposal will have 3 minutes to speak. A chime will be played when 30 seconds remain, and I will ask the presenter to conclude his or her remarks once the time has expired. Each presenter should limit his or her remarks to the topic of the proposal being presented. 10 items will be presented for a vote today. The first three are the company proposals. They appear in the proxy statement as proposals 1 through 3.

The first is the election of 11 directors. Information about each director nominee can be found in the proxy statement. The second is a non-binding advisory vote to approve the compensation of Walmart's named executive officers. The vote on this proposal is advisory, but the board will consider the results in evaluating our executive compensation program. The third proposal is to ratify the appointment of Ernst & Young, as the company's independent accountants for the fiscal year ending January 31, 2023.

Now, we'll move on to the shareholder proposals. The company's response to each can be found in the proxy statement. I will recognize each presenter when it is his or her turn to speak for 3 minutes. The first shareholder proposal appeared as number 4 in the proxy statement. It was submitted by the Humane Society of the United States. A description of the proposal is included in the proxy statement. At the proponent's request, this proposal is being presented without an oral statement. The Board recommends a vote against this proposal for the reasons explained in the proxy statement.

The next proposal appears number 5 in the proxy statement. It was submitted by Cynthia Murray, who appointed Nicoshe James to present it. Ms. James prerecorded her presentation which we will now play.
Unverified Participant

My name is Nicoshe James and I used to work at Walmart. Walmart [indiscernible] (10:50) have to say. He new that the people working for Walmart are the backbone of the entire enterprise. Unfortunately, the Walmart [indiscernible] (11:02) not the Walmart we see today. Walmart [indiscernible] (11:06) Cynthia Murray who has been gracious enough [indiscernible] (11:09) her time to me talking to you light on my sister's story and the unhealthy, unsafe culture of fear that exists at Walmart today.

My sister, Janikka Perry, was found unresponsive on Walmart's bathroom floor Sunday, January 16, 2022. Janikka was a faithful Walmart associate for five years. She worked at the store in North Little Rock and she was the type of person Sam Walton would have wanted to hear from because she knew the ins and out of the store better than anybody.

When she went to work on January 16, she started feeling sick, but it’s a well-known fact that workers who call in sick, need a day off, or have to clock out due to illness are retaliated against or terminated. So although she felt sick, clocking out and going to the hospital was not an option because she cannot risk losing her job. She was a single mother and a breadwinner of her family.

Around the end of her 8-hour shift, Walmart security camera shows Janikka going into the rest room one last time. Almost two hours later, paramedics found my sister unresponsive on Walmart's bathroom floor. That night, my sister was pronounced dead. If a Pandemic Workforce Advisory Council had been in place before January of this year, there could have been policies in place to support my sister's need for emergency assistance. But that's not our reality. That's why I'm turning my grief into action and calling on Walmart executives to an active paid policy so their associates' voice are finally heard and what happened to Janikka does not happen to anyone else.

The paid policy will ensure all associates are entitled to two weeks of paid sick leave and that their health and safety needs are respected. No one should have to work too sick to function and too serious to call off. And in case of emergency, all associates will have clear protocols, proper support, and training on what to do. It should not have taken two hours for paramedics to be called for my sister.

Lastly, the paid policy will ensure associates are working with stakeholders at Walmart on finding solutions for the corporation. Remember, what Sam Walton said, the key to success is to listen to what the associates have to say. Walmart needs to be a healthy and safe place to work where associates are respected and heard. To ensure the success of corporation and associates, Walmart executives needs to enact the paid policy. Thank you for your time.

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Ms. James. We all express our condolences to you and your family. While we disagree with how the circumstances have been characterized, we all agree that Ms. Perry was a valued member of the Walmart and is deeply missed. With respect to the shareholder proposal being considered today, the board recommends that shareholders vote against it for the reasons explained in the proxy statement.

The next proposal appeared as number 6 in the proxy statement. It was submitted by Clean Yield Asset Management on behalf of Julie Kalish who has appointed Molly Betournay to present it. Ms. Betournay pre-recorded her conversation which we will now play.
Molly Betournay
Director-Social Research & Shareholder Advocacy, Clean Yield Asset Management

Good morning, Mr. Chairman, board of directors, and my fellow shareholders. My name is Molly Betournay and I submit the following statement on behalf of my firm, Clean Yield Asset Management, and the filer of this proposal, Julie Kalish.

Our proposal, item number 6 on the ballot, calls on Walmart to report on the risks and costs to the company caused by new and emerging state laws that will restrict access to reproductive healthcare. We've encouraged the board to consider how these laws may impact employee hiring, retention, and productivity, as well as decisions regarding closure or expansion of operations in states with restrictive laws.

As an employer in all 50 states, including many where access to reproductive healthcare is already being restricted and where more restrictions are expected if Roe versus Wade is overturned, Walmart should consider the impact these laws will have on its workforce and business. Research has shown that employees expect and desire comprehensive reproductive healthcare coverage. Studies indicate that college-educated workers want and expect access to abortion coverage. And by a 2:1 margin, employed workers wish to live in states where abortion is legal and accessible. This could impact Walmart's ability to recruit employees.

The loss of access to abortion care may disrupt or prevent employees from remaining in the workforce. Women who cannot access abortion when needed are three times more likely to be unemployed than those who do have access. This could impact Walmart's ability to retain employees.

Abortion restrictions are already interfering with women's ability to work and reducing the talent pool. The Institute for Women's Policy Research estimates that more than half a million more women, aged 15 to 44, would enter the workforce nationally if all state-level abortion restrictions were eliminated. This reduction in the talent pool is likely to increase with new restrictive laws. These challenges are particularly relevant for Walmart, where women comprise 55% of its 1.7 million US employees, that's 935,000 women.

In our view, a postural environment would present Walmart with new challenges related to hiring, retention, productivity by location, public policy positions, and other matters. We believe it is in Walmart's best interest to anticipate likely disruptions to its ability to provide comprehensive reproductive healthcare to all of its employees and to take steps to minimize the impact of these disruptions. The wait-and-see approach isn't sufficient and not helpful to shareholder assessment of risk and management quality.

Fellow shareholders, if you have not already cast your vote, please consider voting yes on item number six. Thank you for your attention.

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Ms. Betournay. The board recommends a vote against this proposal for the reasons explained in the proxy statement. The next proposal appeared as number seven in the proxy statement. It was submitted by the Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration and other co-filers. Sister Sue Ernster pre-recorded her presentation, which we will now play.

Susan Ernster
Vice President & Treasurer, Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration
Good morning, Mr. Chairman, members of the board, and fellow shareholders. I am Sister Sue Ernster the Vice President and Treasurer of the Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration in La Crosse, Wisconsin. We are a longtime shareholder of Walmart.

On behalf of my community and the 21 co-filers who are members of the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility, I hereby move Proposal number 7, which requests that the board of directors oversee the preparation of a public report on whether and how Walmart’s racial justice goals and commitments align with the starting pay for all classifications of Walmart associates. My community of women religious is focused on the intersection of racism and economic justice.

The nation is facing record-setting financial inequality, especially for people of color and mounting demands for real progress on racial justice. At the same time, we are experiencing a great resignation with record turnover and job openings, particularly in the retail industry. As shareholders and people of faith, we are not comfortable benefiting from the company's record profit while still many of the company’s employees must work multiple jobs to make ends meet.

Walmart's commitment to equity, inclusion and growth of their associates is rooted in their value of respect for the individual. This value is underpinned by the company's strategic practices and programs, which are to be admired. The company has made steady progress in promoting people of color and increased philanthropic investments to advance racial equity.

However, we believe more can and should be done to reduce the racial inequities and improve economic justice within our company, which will serve as a catalyst for the entire retail industry. In addition to being a moral issue, we believe there is a business case for this proposal. Walmart associates have identified wages as the most important element of their compensation. Higher wages have been shown to improve recruitment and attendance, promote better health and reduce turnover and operational problems leading to better business performance.

The company has recognized that investment in the overall well-being and growth of their associates have strengthened their workforce and contributed positively to sales and employee retention.

Boosting wages would also benefit Walmart's reputation and bring the company in-line with its peers that have raised starting wages to at least $15 an hour. The report requested by the proponents would help Walmart leadership understand the economic realities the company’s hourly front line employees face. We are not alone in this belief as 13% of the shareholders voted in favor of this proposal last year, amounting to over 30% of the independent vote. We urge shareholders vote for proposal number 7. Thank you for allowing me to speak.

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Sister Ernster. The board recommends a vote against this proposal for the reasons explained in the proxy statement.

The next proposal appeared is number eight in the proxy statement. It was submitted by the National Center for Public Policy Research. Scott Shepard pre-recorded his presentation, which we will now play.

Scott Shepard
Fellow & Free Enterprise Project Director, National Center for Public Policy Research
In its statement opposing our proposal, the company speaks out of both sides of its corporate mouth and along the way establishes exactly why a non-discrimination audit remains vital. Kudos to the company for recognizing at least nominally that it is illegal and wrong for equity-based programs to discriminate against any employees where they're honored with the label, diverse or not. But equity means current discrimination now can make up for other discrimination against other people by other people in the past.

And it also means dividing national wealth and power by a racial spoil system with each racial and other identity-based group getting a proportional share in disregard of individual accomplishment. And supportive equity, the company expressly contradicts its recognition that all employees not only have civil rights but have the same civil rights as all other employees.

The opposition statement says that for Walmart, equity is when diverse identity is no longer a determining factor in shaping an individual's life outcome. But if that meant equality of opportunity and before the law and for each years, but instead, Walmart is calling for equality of outcome, a spoils system based on forbidden categories of discrimination, which, of course, means massive levels of forbidden categories of discrimination, which of course means massive levels of current discrimination on those grounds. This is all that can be meant by the development, for instance, of a financial shared values network built with embedded and intentional efforts to advance racial equity. And the racism inherent in the Center for Racial Equity is built right into the name. It might be good business and a kind act to help poor and deserving associates or others who could benefit from extra opportunities they have lacked.

It is illegal, racist and immoral to limit that assistance on racial grounds or to devote shareholder funds in racist ways to create artificial equality of outcome. Walmart's racial discrimination is further demonstrated by company training programs that have told employees that whites are inherently racist while non-whites are not, and that whites must forever apologize for their skin color and imaginary feelings of supremacy. That sort of employee training is a naked discrimination by race. It creates a hostile work environment on racial grounds. It fairly dares employees to sue to win those suits. It creates massive reputational, legal, and increasingly legislative risks.

Walmart's embrace of equity theory leads it to use shareholder money to fund, frankly, absurd actions, such as assessing alternative justice programs that help retailers minimize or eliminate negative individual interactions with law enforcement. Walmart executives have a duty to minimize the theft of shareholder property, not to spend shareholder money to keep crooks from standing before the law. This is all very simple. Equity on its own terms means active discrimination on racial and other forbidden [indiscernible] (23:11).

In its opposition statement, Walmart pays lip service to the legal fact that all employees have the same civil rights but then cheers itself about its embrace of equity-based discrimination in myriad ways.

Walmart just doesn't get it yet. This audit is vital to save the company and the executives themselves from the massive risks that do and should follow from this new equity-based discrimination.

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Mr. Shepard. The board recommends a vote against this proposal for the reasons explained in the proxy statement. The next proposal appeared as Number 9 in the proxy statement. It was submitted by the National Legal and Policy Center. Paul Chesser prerecorded his presentation, which we will now play.
Paul Chesser
_Director, Corporate Integrity Project, National Legal and Policy Center_

I'm Paul Chesser, Director of the Corporate Integrity Project for National Legal and Policy Center. First, I commend Walmart on at least having an infrastructure on its foundation's website for users to search and find recipients who have received more than $25,000.

Having said that, Walmart now has no excuse to not implement our proposal because you have the website infrastructure in place. Now, all you have to do is upload donations smaller than the $25,000 threshold that you've set and also the ones older than two years old. If, as you state, you're so proud about letting your individual stores make their own donations, why can't I go on Walmart's website and look up who my local store gave it to?

Now, as for the nature of the company's donations, there's a troubling evidence surrounding Walmart management's decision-making and contributions that make our transparency request even more urgent. In October, it was revealed that Walmart had implemented a mandatory critical race theory training for its executives, and the program is recommended for hourly employees.

The company has admitted that it has run this program since 2018. In the program, employees are told that the United States is a white supremacy system, designed by white Europeans, "for the purpose of assigning and maintaining white skin access to power and privilege." It also states that white Americans have been subjected to racist conditioning that then indoctrinates them into white supremacy.

This is the same garbage that flipped the elections in the State of Virginia last year from blue to red. That's the same state that overwhelmingly voted for Barack Obama twice, remember? And it wasn't long ago that my organization, a longtime Walmart shareholder, confronted CEO Doug McMillon about the company's financial support for race demagogue Al Sharpton. Are you still funding Al Sharpton, Mr. McMillon? We haven't forgotten that Walmart co-sponsored his 60th birthday party.

Improving Walmart's transparency about charity would clear something like this up. These donations and training programs, as our friends who sponsored Proposal number 8 stated, create a hostile work environment on racial grounds and pits employees of different races against each other.

Being married 30 years and raising four children, my family shopped at Walmart consistently over that time period. I can't think of a retailer I patronize that has been more pleasantly and harmoniously diverse than Walmart during that whole time. But now because of a Marxist backlash led by Black Lives Matter victors over a couple of wayward police officers, many of our major cities have been destroyed and crime has skyrocketed. Meanwhile, Walmart's solution is to impose a Racial Spoils system on its employees and through its charity. This isn't leadership and it isn't transparency. It's cowardice. Please vote for Proposal number 9.

Rachel Brand
_Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc._

Thank you, Mr. Chesser. The board recommends a vote against this proposal for the reasons explained in the proxy statement.

We will now move on to the final proposal which appeared as number 10 in the proxy statement. It was submitted by Zevin Asset Management on behalf of Ellen Sarkisian. Marcela Pinilla will present it on behalf of the shareholder proponent.
Operator, is Ms. Pinilla on the line?

Operator: Yes.

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you. Ms. Pinilla, you have three minutes.

Marcela Pinilla
Director - Sustainable Investing, Zevin Asset Management

Thank you. Greetings, members of the Walmart board, Mr. Horton, Walmart management, Mr. Penner, and fellow shareholders. My name is Marcela Pinilla, and I'm a Director of Sustainable Investing at Zevin Asset Management. On behalf of our clients, we actively factor corporate ESG-related risks and impacts into our portfolio management. I'm here today to address an important governance issue at Walmart and to formally move proposal number 10 on the proxy ballot.

Our shareholder proposal requests that Walmart disclose company policy and procedures, governing direct and indirect lobbying and grassroots lobbying communications including company payment amounts used for these activities along with the recipients. We also request a description of management and the board's decision-making process and oversight on corporate spending. We have had much constructive dialogue with Walmart to date and really commend the company for the steps it has taken this year to enhance its disclosure of ESG risk management, including its oversight of public policy engagements. However, we remain concerned that Walmart has not fully addressed the requests of our shareholder proposal by disclosing its actual spending.

Walmart is an influential company with a large lobbying footprint. Yet, a complete picture of its spending to influence public policy, including payments, is unavailable for shareholders. Corporate lobbying to influence public policymaking affects all aspects of the economy. Companies are increasingly playing a public role on these issues through their association memberships.

While there’s nothing new about companies weighing in on public policy matter, doing so without evaluating the impacts on society along with business implications in today's world could be riskier than ever. The absence of corporate spending on third-party organizations remains elusive and, therefore, a gap that leaves Walmart open to risky alliances. Walmart deserves credit as a leader with its comprehensive disclosure of its state lobbying spending, yet shareholders currently do not have insight into financial support for third-party groups that lobby behind closed doors without accountability.

In closing, without openness and transparency on how our shareholder money is spent, corporate lobbying can be used to promote public policy objectives that can pose reputational risks to our company.

Thank you for allowing me to speak directly to the board on this matter. Thank you.

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Ms. Pinilla. The board recommends a vote against this proposal for the reasons explained in the proxy statement. This concludes all the matters represented for shareholder consideration at the meeting. It is now 11:00 AM and the polls are now closed.
Based on the initial report from the inspectors of election, the preliminary voting results are as follows. Each director nominee has been elected by a majority of the votes cast. Each of the other company proposals has passed, and each shareholder proposal has failed to receive a majority of the votes cast and, therefore did not pass. The preliminary voting results will be announced in a press release later today, and the official results will be disclosed in a filing with the SEC.

The 2022 Annual Shareholders Meeting is now formally adjourned. We will now pause briefly before moving into a Q&A session moderated by Dan Binder, Senior Vice President of Investor Relations.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Hello. I'm Dan Binder, Senior Vice President of Investor Relations and Corporate FP&A. We will now take about a half hour to respond to questions submitted through the virtual meeting platform. Senior executives of the company are also available to respond to questions and we'll answer as many questions as we can during this time. For relevant questions that could not be answered due to time constraints, the company will provide responses on the Investor Relations section of our corporate website as soon as possible. Substantially similar questions will be grouped together and responded to collectively.

QUESTION AND ANSWER SECTION

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Now, to our first question, which is actually a multipart question how is Walmart able to use ESG and its leverage to lower utility expenses of the company to help the bottom line? And is the company overreaching in terms of its investments in India? Do these investments detract from the main goal of the company in achieving increasing e-commerce growth?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

This is Doug McMillon. I'll take the second part of the question first and Kathleen McLaughlin, our Chief Sustainability Officer, I'll ask you to chime in on the first part of the question as well. But let's address India first. We made our investment in Flipkart and PhonePe in India in 2018, buying the majority share. There were two parts of that business at the time, I guess really three, Flipkart, PhonePe and an apparel business called Myntra. Flipkart and Myntra worked together really closely I kind of think of that as one business, and it's the leading e-commerce marketplace in India.

Since we've made the investment, things have gone well and we continue to be really excited about the performance of the business, the growth rate of the business and the progress they're making in helping to serve customers in India. This is a really large market as everyone knows. It's a fast-growing market and e-commerce as a percent of total within India is still a relatively low share, quite a low share, actually. So we're well-positioned for growth going into the future with the e-commerce marketplace portion of the business.

The other side of that is marketplace portion of the business. The other side of that is the PhonePe business, the financial services platform, which has also performed really well. Extraordinarily high growth rates. We recently shared some additional metrics as it relates to the PhonePe business. Both of those are increasing in value. And we had a fundraise around not too long ago that that confirmed that to be the case.

So, we see the investment in India as being a good investment in both parts of the business. And as it relates to it being part of our ecommerce growth, it is absolutely an important part of our global ecommerce growth. And we learned from the PhonePe business and Flipkart business as it relates to transforming the rest of the company to becoming more of a digital company. So, the expertise, the IP, the talent, the problem solving abilities of our teams there in India are inspiring, further change throughout the entire company, which is also really helpful.

As it relates to the ESG work and the utility expenses, Kathleen, I'll come to you next.

Kathleen McLaughlin
Executive Vice President and Chief Sustainability Officer, & President-Walmart Foundation, Walmart, Inc.

Great. Well, thanks. Thanks, Doug. Yeah. I think it's a good question to underscore the connection between ESG and value for the company. There are a couple of things that we're doing related to energy that help create value. One is energy efficiency. We've been working on this for a long time, i.e., going back to 2005 and perhaps even earlier. And our strategy includes both new facility design and construction as well as retrofitting existing facilities.

So, for example, we incorporate efficiency into new store designs in lighting, heating, ventilation, air conditioning, also refrigeration and other categories such as plug loads. Second, as our existing buildings and equipment age, we aim to replace or upgrade the older equipment with the latest and high efficiency technology. And then finally we also use technology to monitor and optimize the energy use in our buildings.

So, for example, we've installed energy meters in thousands of our facilities around the world. And of course, this allows our energy managers to monitor energy consumption almost real time at our retail stores and distribution centers. And that data is used in several ways, so compiling monthly store reports, triggering variance alarms, diagnosing equipment problems, validating performance of new equipment tests and so on. All of that helps us power our facilities with less energy, and of course that ends up translating into lower utility bills.

At the same time, we've also been working hard on reducing emissions and transitioning to 100% renewable energy. That's a long-stated goal. And as of the end of calendar year 2020, we were at 36%, having our facilities powered by renewable energy worldwide or electricity, I should say. And that includes 600 onsite and offsite renewable energy projects in 10 different countries. In January 2022, the EPA in the United States, the Green Power Partnership Top 30 Retail ranking had us in there as one of the major renewable energy purchasers in the country.

And so we've been doing a number of things there on site and offsite. And most recently in 2021, we contracted to purchase additional renewable energy as an example, including 50 megawatts of 129-megawatt community solar project in New York. And that's going to supply renewable energy to 36 facilities. That's just one example. So over time, transitioning to renewable energy, we think in the context of long-term energy markets and so on is a value-creating play. And it's completely in line with our goal to get to zero emissions in our own operations by 2040.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you, Kathleen. We'll go to our next question. Why do OGP associates make more than four associates when those who work in other departments often have to do OGP runs but do not have their other work reduced?
C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

I'm going to ask Julie Murphy, who leads Walmart US people, to respond to that. And Diana Marshall is also here. She's an Executive Vice President running the southwestern portion of the United States for Walmart US. And we interpret this to be a Walmart US question, certainly sounds like one. Julie, would you mind responding?

Julie Murphy

Thank you, Doug. I appreciate that. We have continued to focus on making Walmart the best place to start your career and to advance as we think in terms of the opportunity. And in so doing that, we've created a ladder of opportunity for the work that we do within our stores. We want our associates to have the opportunity to advance not only with our company, but also within the store that they work in.

And so that would include areas that we are focused on that are growth areas, OGP being one of those areas, online grocery pickup if you're not familiar with the term, and we want to continue to make sure that we have associates focused on that. It is not unusual for us to rally around some of the work within the store if we see increased volumes. We've created a team based structure. So we have dedicated teams to certain parts of the store and the work. But when we do see increased volumes, then we will rally around that and ask the associates to focus on that so that we can make sure that our customer experience is taken care of. I would encourage those associates to speak with their local managers and that facility if there are further concerns as it relates to that.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Thanks, Julie.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

We'll go to our next question. Why can't Walmart raise wages further especially during these tough times? Other companies are raising their wages and $15 is not enough. It's not enough and not a livable wage.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Yeah. I'll respond first and then, Donna Morris, if you'd like to chime in, you certainly can. We've been raising wages for quite some time now, and I'm happy to do that and proud of the progress that we've made over the last few years. I expect that we'll continue to increase wages as we respond to the market, if that's where the market moves. But as Julie mentioned earlier, we don't just think about the wage rate. We think about what happens with benefits, including healthcare, our Walmart share purchase plan, our 401(k), and our investments in tuition-free education. We're looking at a holistic program, trying to create an environment where people want to take on more responsibility, ideally move into a position of management. As I mentioned earlier, 75% of our store managers in the US started out an hourly roles.

I also mentioned earlier that we're now to the point where our average hourly wage for associates in our stores, clubs, and supply chain exceeds $17 here in the US. And our average starting wage in the US is now $15.70. So that's come up quite a bit. And again we're happy to see that. Productivity is also important. We think about that at the same time. And as Julie mentioned, we evaluate these jobs and basically decide what the minimum target and top end should look like for the range of those specific positions. Donna, anything you want to add?
Donna C. Morris
Chief People Officer & Executive Vice President, Walmart, Inc.

Well, thank you, Doug. I would just add that we're continuing to increase the facility start rates and those investments do continue. The starting facility start rate today is at $12 an hour, but the average is over that, it's over $15 an hour. And so that's very much dependent upon the market and the competition in that market.

We have also continued to invest in our Sam's Club associate starting wages, which now start at $15 an hour and can go up to $32 an hour. Our fulfillment centers and our distribution center associates start at $16 an hour and go up to $28 an hour.

And as Doug mentioned, one of our ultimate goals is to provide a pathway of opportunity, ideally within Walmart and, hence, the investment in learning and development and, once again, reinforcement of the over 75,000 associates that have pursued increased education through our Live Better U program.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

We are sensitive to the fact that we're in an inflationary environment and know that our associates are feeling that as well. We have been making some other adjustments that are specific to certain roles in the company and continue to consider other options going forward as we get feedback from our store associates.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

And we'll go to our next question. Do the people who set floor policies have much experience doing the work under real store conditions?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

We do. Actually, I'm looking across the room at Julie, and Julie's got more than a 30 years' experience. Lance de la Rosa's here and that leads the Sam's Club operation, and he also has more than 30 years' experience. Dacona, who leads the US stores team, has more than 30 years' experience and started out assembling bikes. So, those are just a few examples of the fact that many of us did jobs on the sales floor and in other places as we got started with the company, Diana Marshall, who I mentioned earlier, leads operations in the Southwest. Diana, do you want to add anything?

Diana Marshall
Executive Vice President - Southwest Business Unit, Walmart, Inc.

Thanks, Doug. You're exactly right. We have a ton of experiences when we think about processes. And we also, I think, important to know, we actually test everything before it rolls in a store and in an actual environment to make sure that it makes sense and get feedback from the associates that are living it as well. So, I'm really proud of how we're working through that and trying to continue to improve the processes.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

John Furner would be disappointed if I didn't mention him, too. He leads our Walmart US team and has almost 30 years of experience himself.
Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Great. Great. We’ll go to our next question. It’s a statement and a question. Thank you for your leadership during such a challenging time. Could you please share an update on our retail pricing strategy in the current inflationary environment? And if we have any traffic elasticity risk as a result of increasing consumer prices? Thanks again.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Yeah. Those of you that follow the company closely will know that our purpose is to save people money and help them live a better life. And from the time that I move from working in a store into the home office, I was taught to manage margin mix in a way to lower prices and to help drive value for customers and sales productivity. This unique environment in the US is not completely unique to us as a company because of our experience in South America, Mexico and other places where we’ve had inflationary pressure in the past. It is in the US unusual and has moved faster than what we were anticipating as we started the year.

So, we’ve been spending a lot of time working with our merchants, having conversations about how to approach different pricing decisions and making an effort to do things like keeping our opening price point items that are related to food categories as low as possible. We’re paying attention to the price of milk and eggs, of course, as we always do, but also thinking about cans of tuna and macaroni and cheese and ramen noodles and other items that customers are looking to. More so or some customers, in a way, looking towards more during this period of time.

So we’ll do our best to manage what happens with retail pricing as we continue to have cost increases from some suppliers and also have higher costs as it relates to things like fuel. The team has a lot of experience managing these things across the entire company and we’re sharing that experience and expect to go through this period of time performing well as customers look to us for value.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Great. We’ll go to our next question. How long before all the apps will be on the new phones so we can stop using the TCs handhelds?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

That’s a topic that’s come up in recent store visits. I don’t know the actual date for Walmart US. Diana, do you?

Diana Marshall
Executive Vice President - Southwest Business Unit, Walmart, Inc.

Hi, Doug. Actually, they can expect to see through the entire year. We continue each quarter to add new work groups. We’re making some updates in this quarter actually that we’re really excited about adding new capabilities and more enhancements to really simplify the associate experience. So, it will happen throughout the year as we move it forward.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.
It's exciting to get the new handhelds into people's hands and move away from the TCs and I think the demand for apps will continue to be high, which is good. We think we've designed some pretty good ones lately.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Okay. We'll go to our next question. What percentage of the shareholders voted for each proposal?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Rachel Brand, would you mind responding to that one?

Rachel Brand
Secretary & Chief Legal Officer, Walmart, Inc.

Sure, Doug. We'll be announcing those results in a press release today that we'll issue after the market closes and then we'll also be announcing them in a filing that we subsequently filed with the SEC. So, stay tuned.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Our next question, why do you cap long-term associates their cost of living has not been capped?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

As I mentioned earlier, we have a minimum target and max for the jobs in the company, whether those are jobs in the home office or jobs in the field. Those get adjusted over time based on the role itself and what's happening in the market. And I'll ask Kim Lupo, who leads our Total Rewards area, to add anything that she'd like to add.

Kim Lupo
Senior Vice President & Global Head-Total Rewards, Walmart, Inc.

Okay. Thanks, Doug. Just would like to just reconfirm, every year we look at our pay ranges across the country and make adjustments as appropriate. We are very specific to those local conditions.

We also acknowledge that there is the ladder of opportunity that we have talked about. And so our associates have the opportunity to grow their career and grow their compensation through the ladder in addition to within the range. And also like to acknowledge again that this past year, we adjusted the compensation of over 1.2 million associates.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

I'd just add that we value our long-term associates greatly. As I mentioned earlier, a bunch of us are long-term associates, and we appreciate when someone's serving the company for 5, 10, 15. Sometimes, Greg and I are signing certificates for associates with 40, 45 years of experience, occasionally, a 50 here in the US. And they obviously are super important to the success of the company, and understanding where their compensation levels are is important to us.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.
And our next question, how is the business doing in Canada overall?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Doing well. I got to be there in January and had a chance to visit with the management team and visit local stores. Omer Tore is here with us, who's the Chief Financial Officer for International. We were just down at a meeting with our international associates that are here in town for Shareholders' Week and my ears still are ringing from the Canadian team because they brought cowbells to the meeting. They're very excited.

The stores that I saw looked really good. The financial performance of the business has been strong. And strategically, they're working on their flywheel. They're building new businesses and putting them together in a way that's exciting. Appreciate the leadership from IO and the team there during the pandemic period. The team in Walmart Canada, as with our other markets, has really stood tall during that period.

Anything you want to add, Omer?

Omer Tore
Executive Vice President & Chief Financial Officer-Walmart International, Walmart, Inc.

Thanks, Doug. One thing I would add, they're doing a lot of great work in e-commerce, accelerating our online business, and that's – the numbers speak for themselves, and also, they're remodeling the stores continuously so to serve our customers the best way possible.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Thank you.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Going to our next question, what is the plan – what is the wage plan for produce meat departments, in particular, knowing that this is one of the busiest areas in the store with heavier and more sophisticated workloads? It seems like this area is below Walmart's average wage at $12 per hour.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Julie, do you want to go first?

Julie Murphy
Executive Vice President & Chief People Officer-Walmart U.S., Walmart, Inc.

I do. As we mentioned earlier, we are very detailed and deliberate on our focus with wages, and that would include the produce and the meat departments. They are very important aspects of our business as we think in terms of fresh perception and the skills and the abilities – capabilities that we need to develop within the stores. So we look at this not only as we look at the overall starting rates for the stores, but we look at specific areas and capabilities within the stores and make sure that we maintain that investment and that we're competitive within the markets that we serve.
C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Produce and meat would not be below other areas. If there’s a specific instance there where someone's got a concern, please reach out and talk to someone in your leadership area or reach out to one of us.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Our next question, do current fuel costs provide any additional impetus to consider a transition to at least a partially electric fleet for Walmart’s massive logistics operations?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Yeah. I'm excited about the electrification of transportation and we've got commitments out there. I'm just speaking to the US. There are other things going on in international. Omer, you or someone could chime in. But here in the US, we've got several commitments out to buy electric vans for a last mile delivery capability. I hope that things progress to the point that we can be testing things with tractors. We've got a few orders out there and commitments to try and help drive some innovation there as well. But I think the place we'll see it first, it's with EV vehicles, vans in particular, running last mile from stores into neighborhoods.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Our next question, the company had negative operating cash flow in Q1. Is that a concern?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Now, I'll introduce Brett Biggs, our CFO at least for the next few days, who's done a fantastic job with – for the company. And yes, cash flow would be one of our concerns from the first quarter.

Brett M. Biggs
Chief Financial Officer & Executive Vice President, Walmart, Inc.

Yeah. That's a good question. The first quarter is always a bit of an anomaly, one, because of the way our bonus structures work in the stores and in the home office. Those are paid out in the first quarter. And there's other payments that we make during the quarter that are unique to that quarter. But we also – in the first quarter, our operating income was a little lower than we had anticipated and our inventory was higher than we anticipated. So as we buy inventory, obviously, that uses cash.

I'm not concerned about that. We will work through the inventory that we have in the stores, the excess inventory over the next quarter or two. Some of the timing that happened in Q1 will reverse out in Q2 and Q3. So, I'm not concerned about what happened in Q1. And just to point out again, the financial – the incredible financial stability of the company, we're a AA-rated credit company, and we still have over $10 billion of cash on the balance sheet. So, good question but I think you'll see that turn around in Q2, Q3.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Great. Our next question, will Walmart ever bring Walmart Academies to Canada for hourly associates to grow their careers?
C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Donna, would you like to take that one?

Donna C. Morris
Chief People Officer & Executive Vice President, Walmart, Inc.

We actually, Doug – and thank you for this question – are actively looking at how we might be able to bring Live Better U to our frontline associates in Canada. Clearly, the education system is different in the country and the access to education in terms of the cost is different than what we see here in the US, making it somewhat more accessible for some of our associates. Nonetheless, we are encouraged and excited about that prospect.

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

We do have education and training programs in every market where we operate around the world. They’re now all branded Walmart Academy. Over time, there may be some consistency there, too.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

Our next question. Overall, are supply chain issues diminishing?

C. Douglas McMillon
President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, Walmart, Inc.

Not as much as we'd like as it relates to inflation, if I can categorize that as a supply chain issue. It has been quite a couple of years as it relates to the supply chain. Here in the US, we buy about two-thirds of what we sell here in the US. It's either grown or made here. So, the other third comes from China, India, Mexico, Canada, primarily. And we did see during the pandemic pressures from the US supply chain in protein categories and some of the other areas, and you all know about what happened with the ports as it relates to imports.

So during the pandemic, with people being at home more, we saw a greater level of demand for an extended period of time, call it, two years that really stretched supply chains, both domestically and as it relates to imports, just focused on the US. And then, during the first quarter, other things happened, including the war in Ukraine, that drove up costs related to fuel further than they were already and put more pressure on things like grains. So, our suppliers that were already feeling some pressure and had been talking to us about cost increases, some of which we had received, continue to feel more intense pressure.

And so, today, when I think about supply chain concerns, I'm less worried about what's happening with container flow and more concerned about what's happening with inflation itself. Some of the costs that we were talking about earlier related to cash flow showed up with container storage and things like that during Q1 for Walmart US and for Sam's Club US, in particular. And so, those things are fairly short term and they'll pass through in the next few quarters as we work that out.

So, I think demand will stay fairly strong. We'll have a successful sales year. And we've increased our guidance by a little bit after releasing our Q1 results or as we released our Q1 results. But we do think that that inflationary pressure is something we should all be keeping an eye on, particularly for some of our customers.
Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

We'll go to our next question. Does Walmart have the wherewithal to establish its own real estate investment trust, otherwise known as a REIT, as a separate company?

Brett M. Biggs
Chief Financial Officer & Executive Vice President, Walmart, Inc.

Brett Biggs. This is something used to be a little more popular probably 10, 15 years ago, where companies would separate their real estate out into a separate company and then lease it to the operating company. You don’t see it quite as much as they used to see it use. As a company, we’re always looking at the best way to operate the business. We own the vast majority of our real estate. There are times we lease assets we own. We have minority interests in companies. We own majority of some public companies. There’s a lot of different things that we look at and how to run the company and how to own those assets. And as we’ve gone through it, the real estate investment trust is just not something that has made sense for us and for shareholders.

Daniel Binder
Senior Vice President, Corporate & Enterprise FP&A and Investor Relations, Walmart, Inc.

This is all the time we have four questions. As I mentioned before, for relevant questions that could not be answered due to time constraints, the company will provide responses on the Investor Relations section of our corporate website as soon as possible. Substantially, similar questions will be grouped together and responded to collectively.

Thank you, everyone. This concludes our meeting.

Operator: This now concludes the meeting. Thank you for joining and have a pleasant day.
